Oxford Reports on International Human Rights Law

Overview

Oxford Reports on International Human Rights Law (IHL) covers international decisions on human rights from a variety of global and regional courts.

Cases on the European Convention on Human Rights

There is selective coverage of European Commission and Court decisions. Cases selected include all of the most important plenary and Grand Chamber judgments at the admissibility and merits stage of proceedings, as well as other decisions and judgments of significance for their contribution to the development of the case law of the European Convention. Criteria for including coverage of cases are:

- Whether the Court's own mechanisms deem the judgment to be relevant (Grand Chamber judgments, pilot and priority judgments, etc);
- Whether the judgment demonstrates a potential or actual shift in the Court's jurisprudence (be it an explicit acknowledgement that the Court is departing from its previous case law, or the presence of dissenting opinions that suggest future development); and

The object of this book has so far been to examine the various aspects of the doctrine of the limitation of the judicial function in international society from the point of view of their relation to the practice of States and to accepted rules of international law. In addition to these aspects, expressed in the current distinction between legal and political disputes, this doctrine appears in international law as a general legal proposition, namely, as a doctrine based either on a supposed limitation of the place of law in any political community (including that...
