COURSE DETAILS

“The promise of equality in India is not fulfilled merely by constitutional text, but by confronting the hidden and systemic exclusions that shape everyday life. Anti-discrimination law is therefore not a closed chapter, but an evolving constitutional project.”

ABOUT THE COURSE

Despite constitutional guarantees, discrimination in India persists across institutions such as schools, workplaces, healthcare, families, and public and private spaces, operating not only as individual wrongdoing but as a systemic phenomenon embedded in social structures. This course examines how caste, gender, sexuality, religion, disability, and reproductive inequality function in modern India, drawing on landmark judgments, global jurisprudence, social movements, and contemporary scholarship. Beyond theoretical engagement, the course seeks to deepen understanding by drawing on the expertise of distinguished resource persons, enhancing analytical skills, and fostering a culture of research, dialogue, and awareness. At the same time, the course encourages students to critically engage.
